

The Ross Cloud Podcast

Christopher Ross is a natural behind the microphone. His strong, easy voice draws in conversation as he talks to all kinds of interesting people in the spheres of entertainment, business, healing, and motivation. Now streaming on all platforms including the social media platform YouTube, Ross Cloud Podcast aims to help others become better through conversation.

Our own Beth Kincaid, who is a psychotherapist in office 311-12, is regularly featured on Ross Cloud Podcast where she offers free-to-listen healing sessions.

Actor D. Jerome, who appears in the stage play, Hamilton, came on the podcast to talk to Chris. Bern Nadette Stanis from Good Times also graced the podcast. There's a steady stream of local and national artists dropping by suite 314-16 at The Guilford Building to talk and record.

Chris is an actor and entertainer himself. He previously acted in two traveling stage plays and even hosted a cooking show on YouTube. He's always been creative, but along the way he branched into business. For 25 years he managed restaurants. Then he joined The Aaron T. Jones Jetblack Empowerment Foundation for an 18-month internship and learned the creative and business sides of podcasting.

Today Chris is an entrepreneur gradually expanding a multifaceted business. He fills in the corners of his podcasting enterprise by making beaded jewelry and creating stylish t-shirts and other items. Chris welcomes sponsors for his podcasts. He is expert at highlighting a sponsor's business while he moves through a podcast. For more information on sponsorship, contact rosscloudpodcast@gmail.com.

Pre-Demolition Alert: Site preparation on the parking lot at the south side of The Guilford Building will start on Monday, July 24. You may hear concrete saws and other work from time to time. But no heavy demo for the time being. Updates to follow.
